

WHAT ARE “END GAME” STRATEGIES?

On many an occasion, homeowners and investors purchase real property in hopes of either building equity or generating an income, or both.

Problematic to this situation is the tens of millions of pieces of real property in America that were tainted by Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. and its parent, now known as MERS CORP Holdings, Inc.

In 2007, a systemic wave of foreclosure actions swept across the U.S., which eventually caused a chain-reaction event on Wall Street that imploded like a house of cards. It was at this point that Clouded Titles author Dave Krieger began his research into what is now known as the Mayday Edition version. Unfortunately, by the time many attorneys saw the real truths of the matter, the banks, their servicers and unscrupulous law firms stole millions of pieces of property from American property owners and investors that had no idea as to how to defend against these dastardly practices.

During the course of his investigation into the foreclosure debacle, Krieger teamed up with California attorney Al West, who had been litigating cases in the foreclosure world for a short period of time. Both realized that there were different kinds of strategies necessary to beat the banks and their servicers at their own game and sought to develop them into a working model that could easily be understood by distressed homeowners, paralegals, investors and their attorneys.

Both Krieger and West discovered that not every strategy brings a “finite end” to the pattern and practice of the chicanery the banks and their law firms plied upon the courts, setting bad case law in their favor. This means war! This means “getting ugly”! The banks are not going to stop until they’ve securitized every piece of property in America and turned this country into a nation-state full of renters and debtors. This incentivized the two to author the book The Quiet Title War Manual, to help property owners in their quest to properly strategize counter-attack plans to get the justice they deserve!
